

Hills Snyder

Originally a painter, and known in the seventies and eighties for labor-intensive constructions and drawings featuring mythic narratives laced with dark humor and deceptive whimsy, Hills Snyder's work took a more minimalist turn in the nineties with projects in which a large variety of images/objects were maneuvered into cohesive semi-site installations interacting with pre-existing architectural elements.

With The Incredible Shrinking Man (1999) and Dunk (2001), his work moved into performance and the interactive, using any media appropriate to the project at hand. In 2005, he created Book of The Dead as a resident artist in the International Artist Residency program at Artpace, San Antonio. This work was the beginning of an ongoing series of linked projects, including All Good Children (2008), Casual Observer/Causal Observer (2010), Steam (2015), and Misery Repair Shoppe (2018).

In October 2010 Snyder spent nine days on the road replacing objects formerly gathered by curator Jens Hoffmann for the Artpace exhibition On the Road. This action retrieved the objects contextualized by Hoffmann as stereotypically regional and returned them to their original or near-original locales, hence salvaging them from the sealed narrative projected by the curator. To complete this task Snyder drove Hoffmann's route in reverse, driving throughout Texas and Eastern New Mexico. A few highlights included a Stetson placed on the grave of Blind Lemon Jefferson; pouring back sand taken from White Sands National Monument; a photo of John Wayne which Snyder inscribed with the words, "Maybe This'll Be the Day," before giving it to The Buddy Holly Center, Lubbock, TX; and a 1950s era Lone Star beer can donated to the permanent collection of the San Antonio Museum of Art, which was converted in the late seventies from the historic Lone Star Brewery that the can came from over half a century ago. This on-the-road writing project, sponsored by Glasstire and titled One Kind Favor, was the seed for subsequent road works, Altered States (2016 and ongoing) and Your Nowhere Is My Somewhere. See you there. (2017-2018).
